ELMER D. JONES AN ENTHUSIASTIC MEMBER OF LIFE UNDERWRITERS

Elmer D. Jones, chairman of the com mittee on entertainment for the Utah Life Underwriters' association, and one of the organizers of the association, has devoted a great deal of energy to its maintenance, and is especially interested in the work that is being done by the association in eliminating from the business the agents and field men who endeavor to secure business by dishonest methods, and is opposed to the evils of "twisting," and of securing policies by offering "board conract' inducements.

Speaking of some of the phases of life insurance, Mr. Jones comments on the advantages to be derived from "en-the advantages to be derived from "endowment" policies especially, as inducing savings and affording protection to the beneficiaries at the same time. "One special phase of this sort of life insurance," says Mr. Jones, "is illustrated by an endowment policy taken out recently by the members of a Los Angeles firm for the protection of their business. The policy calls for the payment of $800,000 to the beneficiaries in case of death of the members of the firm. As this policy is incontestable and can not be attacked by any process of law to the deprivation of the bene and can not be attacked by any process of law to the deprivation of the bene ficiary, it secures the creditors of the firm absolutely against loss through the death of the policyholders and the consequent cessation of the business. "In short," says Mr. Jones, "these men have created an estate of $800,000. In the event of the failure of the business while the members of the firm are livery and the consequence." the event of the failure of the business while the members of the firm are living, the creditors have their recourse according to the ordinary process of law. But in case of the failure of the business due to the death of the members of the firm, the payment of the policy secures the creditors against loss. This thing works the same way with holders of smaller individual policies and secures to the holder an estate to the value of the policy, which is paid and secures to the holder an estate to
